

Subject: Free Planning Resource for Middle School Educators: Support Equitable, Engaging Learning Outside the Classroom

Dear AMLE Team,

I'm reaching out to share a free resource that directly supports AMLE's mission to help middle school educators reach every student, grow professionally, and create great schools: the Student Travel Planning Guide 2025.

Designed specifically for middle level educators, this guide features practical tools for planning meaningful and inclusive school trips that extend learning beyond the classroom. It includes sample itineraries to places like the Museum of the American Revolution and Colonial Williamsburg, along with checklists, fundraising tips, and curriculum connections tailored to young adolescents.

The guide reflects many of AMLE's core values:

- Responsive to young adolescents' need for hands-on, exploratory learning
- Challenging and empowering, encouraging students to connect their classroom experiences with the world around them
- Equitable, with resources to help schools overcome financial barriers to access
- Engaging, offering experiences that spark curiosity and participation

We believe this would be a valuable addition to AMLE's educator resources—whether through an article on your website, social media, or professional learning events. I'd be happy to assist you in writing copy and creating digital assets for the channels mentioned above, or any others you think this resource aligns with.

Thank you for the work you do to champion the middle school years and support educators who are shaping confident, curious, and capable learners.

Warm regards,
